Entertainment in Kabul

Since ISIS' declaration of a caliphate headquartered in Mosul, many in the media have drawn comparisons between Iraq and Afghanistan. Although the American-brokered unity government is set to take the reigns of the country, the threat of insecurity looms. People still remember the terrorist attacks on soft targets in the capital this spring, but despite these memories, a relaxed atmosphere permeates through parts of Kabul.

The average per capita income in Afghanistan is around $700 per year, but there is a growing segment of Kabuli society that earns significantly more, and they are looking for ways to enjoy their free time.

For young Afghans, this can be gathering at someone's house to listen to music or smoke hookah. Outside the home, there is an array of options: in recent years, a water park, bowling alley, and karaoke bar have opened up in the city.

The latest addition to the entertainment scene is Kabul Paintball Park, an outdoor arena where visitors use weapons that shoot paint instead of ones that shoot bullets.
